

Personal Information Charter

How and why we handle your personal data, your rights and our privacy notices.

This Charter will help you understand general principles about how and why the Food Standards Agency (referred to hereafter as we, us, our, FSA) collect and process information, what types of information that we collect, how and where we store your data and what your rights are.

Our Website Privacy Policy will describe how we collect and use data in relation to our website. It will also list individual Privacy Notices that we provide to you where we collect your personal data for various specific services and purposes in order to carry out our duties.

We respect and value the privacy of everyone and only collect and use information in a manner consistent with your rights and our obligations under the law, including the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR).

Who does GDPR apply to?

The GDPR applies to 'Controllers' and 'Processors'.

A controller determines the purposes and means of processing personal data.

A processor is responsible for processing personal data on behalf of a controller.

Where we act as a Data Controller, we have an obligation to tell you how and why we will collect your data, how we use and store it, and your rights in respect of that data.

Where we act as a Data Processor or engage a processor to process data on our behalf we will do so in accordance with requirements in GDPR to ensure the necessary safeguards are in place to ensure your data is used appropriately and to keep your data safe.

The GDPR does not apply to certain activities including processing covered by the Law Enforcement Directive as enacted in UK law by Part 3 of the Data Protection Act 2018.

What is personal data?

Personal data identifies an individual directly, for example, a name, or indirectly, for example, a reference number when combined with identifying information held separately.

Some personal data is more sensitive in nature and requires more careful handling. GDPR defines 'special categories of personal data' which means data relating to a living person's racial or ethnic origin, political opinions, religious or philosophical beliefs, trade union membership, genetic data, biometric data, data concerning health or data concerning someone's sex life or sexual orientation.

Why we need your personal information

Our main objective under the Food Standards Act 1999 ('the Act') is:

'to protect public health from risks which may arise in connection with the consumption of food (including risks caused by the way in which it is produced or supplied) and otherwise to protect the interests of consumers in relation to food.'

Functions and powers are provided to us by law so that we may collect personal information to fulfil our key objectives as follows:

- to regulate food by engaging with organisations both directly, and indirectly through Local Authorities and Other Competent Authorities, Government Agencies and Industry Bodies, to ensure they conform to the standards that we set.
- to analyse and evaluate risks around food generally.
- to receive advice and information to formulate policy and consult on that policy so that it is fairly implemented.
- to inform our policies and standards by understanding issues facing the general public and food business operators in relation to food and food safety, including issues around health, social or economic factors.
- to raise awareness around food safety, for example by providing alerts around issues such as product recalls and allergies.
- to help promote best practice through signposting information and providing training resources to interested and relevant parties.
- to investigate and take enforcement action as necessary where we become aware of practices that are not carried out in the best interest of consumers and that contravene our policies, standards or the law.

In order to fulfil our Public Task, we will also collect and process data about our staff, subcontractors, agencies, subject matter experts and other partners.

We work closely with Local Authorities and Other Competent Authorities, Government Agencies and Industry Bodies both within and outside the UK and have broad powers to share information with those organisations where it is proportionate and necessary to meet our objectives. We will only share information where we have a legal basis to do so.

Our Promise

The above list of functions and powers is not exhaustive. From time to time there may be other reasons why we need to collect information to meet our statutory duties. But where we collect your information, and the Data Protection Act 2018 requires it, we will always:

- make sure you know why we need it and why we are legally allowed to hold it
- only ask for what we need, and not to collect too much or irrelevant information
- protect it and make sure nobody has access to it who shouldn't
- let you know if we share it with other organisations
- make sure we don't keep it longer than necessary

What information do we collect?

The information that we may obtain to carry out our statutory functions and exercise our powers is broad. It is important under the Data Protection Act 2018 that we are transparent in what we collect. Therefore, we have set out in general terms the types of data we collect and our processing in the key areas outlined above that help us meet our Public Task.

Food regulation

As a regulator, on an ongoing basis, we develop policy and standards and work with Local Authorities and Other Competent Authorities, Government Agencies and Industry Bodies to ensure standards are met. Examples of where we work collaboratively in this area include, but are not limited to:

- registering of food businesses
- approvals of food premises
- implementing official controls in Food Business Operators

We, therefore, may collect information about people and organisations to whom our regulatory processes apply. This will include personal information such as name and contact details of people who represent Food Businesses that we or Local Authorities and Other Competent Authorities and Agencies regulate. We also collect commercially sensitive details of levels of compliance achieved by those businesses. Such information can be both personally sensitive and/or commercially sensitive depending on the nature of our regulatory processes and investigations.

Monitoring and evaluation of risks

One of our statutory functions is to make observations to keep food safe. We may combine and analyse information obtained in the course of our regulatory functions with information we have obtained from public and private sources.

For example, we may collect information from, and share information with Local Authorities and Other Competent Authorities, Government Agencies and Industry Bodies in the UK and Internationally. We may gather information from publicly available sources, such as websites, and make use of web scraping software to carry out our legal powers including for the purpose of helping us evaluate risk.

These processes of collecting data, adding value to it by combining it with other data, and acting as a central point to share data about real and potential risks relating to unsafe food, support our remit to ensure food and feed is safe in the interest of consumers. These risk analyses and evaluation processes also help inform our Policy and Standards as do the activities that we set out in the next section.

Informing Policy and Standards

We undertake a number of activities that help us to inform Food Policy, Guidelines, Standards and Regulation as follows:

- Consultations and surveys – we have a legal duty to ensure that policy that we formulate can be applied fairly. We may engage with organisations including sole traders and partnerships and collect your personal information in order to consult with you. Generally, we would not expect to collect sensitive data but where we do so we will give you assurances around how it will be collected and held in accordance with GDPR.
- Advisory Committees – we collect personal information to administer the work subject matter experts do advising us in a number of key areas around food regulation across the UK. For more information see our Privacy Notice for Appointments to Advisory Committees, The Science Council and associated subgroups. We also maintain a Register of Specialists who can support us on an ad hoc basis in the appraisal of project proposals and evaluation of final reports. For more information see our Privacy Notice for Register of Specialists

- Research – we either engage in research directly or more commonly we use trusted and reputable research companies to carry out studies and research on our behalf. We commission these studies in relation to health, social or economic factors that we need to consider to shape our policies and standards and improve our food regulation. We, or our research partners, may collect both personal and special category information in accordance with high ethical standards and GDPR. For more on our approach to research see our Privacy Notice for Research participants.

Raising awareness and promoting best practice

- Alerts – we collect personal and commercial information, including sensitive information, as described in the Charter in accordance with our Statutory Powers. Where we become aware of any Food Safety issues that may impact on Consumers then we will publish alerts around these issues in the interest of public safety. For example, we may publish Alerts around Product Recalls or related to Allergies. The Alerts will be published through our website and also notifications will be provided to people and organisations who subscribe to, or are required to, receive them.
- Training and Awareness – we may collect your information to offer a range of training opportunities to help Food Businesses and other interested parties implement best practice in relation to Food Safety. This training may be available through our website or other events that we organise, and we will inform you how we will use your information when you sign up.

Investigations and Enforcement

In observing compliance in relation to food regulations and exercising our powers to monitor and evaluate risks we will identify specific incidents that require prompt investigation in order to protect consumers. We will collect whatever information is necessary in the course of these investigations in accordance with our Public Task and where the incident is not a criminal activity it will be concluded by our Incidents Team. Appropriate action, including enforcement action, will be taken and we will publish alerts and notifications to people and organisations as we are required by law in order to keep food safe.

Where it becomes apparent to us either, through our own investigations or through information supplied to us, that criminal activity is suspected, our National Food Crime Unit (NFCU) will collect and use personal information in accordance with the Law Enforcement Directive as enacted into UK Law in Part 3 of Data Protection Act 2018. NFCU is a dedicated law enforcement function of the Food Standards Agency (FSA) and therefore has wide-ranging powers in the collection and use of information. The unit provides leadership on food crime across England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The unit works closely with the Scottish Food Crime and Incidents Unit within Food Standards Scotland. More information about NFCU can be found on our website.

This information is often both personally and commercially sensitive, and we apply the highest possible safeguards in relation to its collection and any subsequent processing. Our specific privacy notices in relation to this activity are on the following links National Food Crime Unit and Criminal Investigation and Prosecution Team.
